Southside May Lose Legislators With State Re-Districting Plan

The 140 members of the Virginia General Assembly will face one inescapable fact when they convene their redistricting session here the end of the month: Someone's got to get hurt.

They are well aware of the political fact that present House and Senate districts can be balanced out to anywhere near mathematical exactness — as directed by the U. S. Supreme Court — without bringing some legislative careers to an end.

The potent Privileges and Elections Committees of both houses have begun the preliminary work toward firming up a plan to present to the full Assembly when it convenes at noon Nov. 30.

GOV HARRISON told the two PAE committees that the basic criteria the federal courts would consider in determining whether the new redistricting plan was valid would be the mathematical exactness of constituents per legislator.

But he said the U. S. Supreme Court also had indicated it would tolerate some variance from mathematical exactness to keep legislative districts from chopping up political subdivisions, towns, cities and counties.

To be mathematically exact, each of the 100 delegates should represent approximately 40,000 persons and each senator 100,000. But after the 1962 redistricting — the act knocked down by a three-judge federal court—delegates represented from 22,099 to 95,000 persons and senators from 61,000 to 167,000.

Any redistricting plan is bound to put some variance from certain at present — legislative seats on the line.

It seems pretty clear that the sparsely settled southwest stands to lose more legislators, along with the southside where many members of the dominant Democratic organization hail from.

ON SEPT 18 the three-judge court directed that the legislature must reapportion itself by Dec 15, and that the 100 delegates and 40 senators from the new districts must stand election before the 1966 legislative session.

Except for the delegates who will find themselves lumped in a district with another delegate — the election will come on the regular date for filling House seats.

But senators are elected for four-year terms, and they normally wouldn't stand again until 1967. The state asked Chief Justice Earl Warren to stay the re-election order for the senators, but he declined and the matter has been appealed to the whole Supreme Court. What the court will do is not known.

Odds and ends: song title, 'Walter, Walter lead me to the Altar.' And with Thanksgiving coming up, a favorite topic is food and that brings up a question of famous eating places you have visited. My nomination is divided between Rod's Steak House in Williams, Arizona, and Antoine's in New Orleans. Probably have to say The French Restaurant of Jules and Roy at Antoine's and their specialty of Oysters a la Rockefeller. Should not have mentioned this topic, for there is Clifton's in Los Angeles, O'Donnell's in D.C and the old rendezvous of Hotel Rueger in Richmond with its oyster bar . . . just dump a peck of oysters in the full shell, a shucking knife and a cup of vinegar in front of you and you are all set. But experienced gourmets can make you hungry by just mentioning the name of their favorite places to eat and that would include the Old Bay Line Steamer from Norfolk to Baltimore where you spent most of the trip eating. Say, anyone got an extra quail or two? If so, let us arise and sing a verse of No. 83 (Bring Them In!)

The cavalcade from the seminary, which included 14 faculty members and 17 students was sponsored by the Candidates committee of the Appomattox Presbytery.

Don C. West spoke at Appomattox Court House Presbyterian Church.

The need for more men for the ministry is shown by the fact that in the Appomattox Presbytery in 1963, there were 83 Presbyterian U. S. churches with 12,475 members and only four candidates for the ministry.

In the whole Presbyterian Church U. S. in 1963, at least 134 new ministers were needed to fill existing needs and only 122 were ordained that year.

In 1960, 18,105 candidates for the ministry were enrolled in all accredited theological schools in the United States and in 1963, the enrollment was 17,699 — a drop of 406 candidates.

Pamplin City Termed 'Unique'

by Mrs. Annie Fore

PAMPLIN CITY — Many people are curious to know more about Pamplin City. Well I want to tell you, it is not such a small one as one might think just passing through, for it is the center of a large progressive farming area and rather unique for its situation as it is located, you could say, in a corner of three contiguous counties, Appomattox Prince Edward and Charlotte.

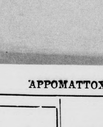
Especially now with the new addition to Harvey's Supermarket "Lucy's Beauty Shop" operated by Miss Lucy William and two more business places, the "William G. Baldwin Barber Shop" and "Pete's Radio and TV Service" in operation on Main Street, "The Cobb Nursing Home" recently opened for patients and all the new modern homes, Yes it must be said Pamplin City is spreading out.

I must tell you Pamplin City is its real name, just as your name might be John Doe, and mine etc. The family of Pamplin's that owned much of the land here many years ago lived just beyond the railroad about a stone's throw from our home which is the last house down near the underpass on Route No. 47 where we have lived for 39 years the 15th of last March.

The Pamplin cemetery is also near the site of the Pamplin home. A frame house which was torn down about 40 years ago. I understand after the old depot was built and a few stores, the Pamplins gave it their name, with perhaps reference of it being coming just as it is today with a large number of nice friendly people who have shared sorrows and joys with me through their news and daily contacts during my sojourn here that I feel I am really and truly a part of them. Guess the greatest reward for being a news correspondent is sharing.

Pamplin City is still on the map. See for yourself.

The Pastor Speaks



Rev. Thomas Waddill

"Let your fingers do the walking thru the Yellow Pages. Learn the facts. Find it fast."

So goes an advertisement one hears frequently over the radio. There are few material things we need which cannot be located there. Through radio, T.V, newspaper, and magazine advertising we are told where to find almost any article we might want. Not only are our wants supplied but our appetites are whetted to want more and more of the pleasures of this world.

More often the deeper needs of life are not treated. There are no "Yellow Pages" telling us where to find those things necessary to the spiritual life. These things are not for sale. There is not profit in them. The advertisers disregard them. As a result most of us are much less aware of our spiritual necessities than we are of the material luxuries. We need a great deal more time seeking the latter then we do the former.

If we are going to wake up to our spiritual needs we will have to recognize our own responsibilities in this area and clothe our spirits as well as our bodies. The church plays an important role in making us aware of our spiritual needs, but cannot match the efforts of the secular world in advertising its wares. The church provides the resources for these in spiritual need. In the church one can "buy" food and clothes for the spirit. Without money and without price one can obtain the things necessary to spiritual good health and growth.

When problems arise the church stands ready to help. Whatever the nature of the problem: whatever other resources may be available; the church has resources available for the asking. Many people face all their problems alone simply because they are not aware that help is available.

We must admit that in many instances the church fails, because it is composed of fallible people, but we don't stop driving our car just because of one flat tire or an empty gas tank. Most ministers have had some type of training in counseling those with problems. If they can't give the needed help they likely know where help can be found. Regardless of the kind of problem you face help IS available.

Let your feet do the walking, to the church of your choice!

The Good Fight

Lesson for November 22, 1964

Anyone who thinks the road to eternal life is lined with roses and paved with violets should freshen up his memory of the Apostle Paul. He was a saint, but not a quiet one. He was perpetually in trouble with the government. Many people, some of them influential, in the church were against him. He was called a liar, crank, agitator, heretic, traitor to his own people. Also, together a controversial figure, a man who was always (so it was alleged) stirring up trouble. Now many men lead stormy lives; but not all of them are saints. The thing that sets Paul out, for us, in the ranks of the great servants and champions of God was the fact that he never doubted that he was on God's side. In spite of his rough and ready unsuccessful life, he was and remained a happy man.

The Good Fight

By the time Paul wrote this letter to Timothy, he was near the end of his time on earth, and he knew it. He can look back on his life, as an old man can, and sum it all up once and for all, before the final call of the curtain. He uses language which is a long way from saying he had had an easy time. I have fought the good fight, but says. Not just a good fight, but the good fight, the struggle between God and evil. It is a fight that began before the human race appeared on this earth. It burst out anew when mankind arrived on the scene; every man is involved in it whether he knows it or not. For whatever a man does counts for God or it counts for evil. Some good people, appalled by the dreadful power of evil, and shaken by what they see going on in the world around them, have sought refuge in flight. They have gone into hermits' cells or into monasteries — anywhere out of this wicked world. Paul was not of that stripe. He stayed to join the fight. Perhaps Paul was thinking of the Roman "games" in the Coliseum, between small armies of gladiators, fighting to the very death. At any rate Paul was not in this great struggle "just for kicks" but to the end even if that meant death.

The Great Race

At any rate, when Paul says he has fought the good fight he uses a word which can be expressed in athletic terms: I have played on the team. A member of an Olympic team (now, and then also is not a soloist. He has to keep in mind that he is competing as representing a nation as well as a team. Paul is thinking of life as a struggle in which the contestants encourage and help one another.

Along with the business about the fight, Paul uses another figure of speech to get his meaning across. I have finished the race, he says. Finished—anyone can start a marathon, but how many can finish it? There is something about the word "race" that just fits as a description of the Christian's active life. A runner must not be distracted by crowds, by applause or booing. He must keep his eye, or his mind's eye, on the finishing tape.

I Was Rescued

Paul learned it the hard way: life is not all a fight or a race. It is not all a glorious struggle, with many spectators. It is often a matter not of doing but being done to; not of active living but patient suffering. Paul in jail for the "crime" of preaching the truth about God; Paul attacked by slander and unwilling to slander in return; Paul kept on the anxious seat for years waiting for a corrupt judge to pass a verdict; Paul with his "thorn in the flesh" that would not go away . . . much of his life was just standing what he had to stand. But always God was there; always he would find God standing there too. A saint must struggle; a saint must suffer; and he does not always get his crown in this world.
